Ford Rules Out Britain for Plant

By John M. Lee

LONDON, Feb. 23 (NYT).—The Ford Motor Co. said today it had scratched Britain as a possible site for a $72 million plant because of persistent labor troubles in this country.

After a year we have made delivery promises that we are unable to keep, Mr. Batty wrote, and with the many impatient customers with whom we do business overseas, our ability is virtually exhausted.

Nixon Acts On Wages In Building

Rejects General Freeze for Now

By Carroll Kilpatrick and Frank C. Porter

WASHINGTON, Feb. 23 (UPI).—President Nixon today suspended the Davis-Bacon Act, which requires payment of prevailing local wage scales on federal building projects.

The President's action is an emergency move aimed at holding down wage and price levels in the building industry.

Construction workers in the building and construction trades department averaged $10.37 an hour.

The action I have taken today, Mr. Nixon said, is based on the principle that government programs which contribute to excessive wage and price increases must be modified or rescinded in periods of inflation.

The President said this is the same principle he invoked in earlier attempts to hold down price increases in steel and oil.

In order to suspend Davis-Bacon, the President was required to declare a national emergency.

Critics of Davis-Bacon claim that it tends to keep wage rates high by requiring payment on federal contracts of prevailing scales in the particular area.

Suspension of the act, it is hoped, will slow down the rapid increase in construction pay rates, which averaged 18.3 percent for first-year increases negotiated in major contracts last year.

On Five Occasions Calley Says Medina Ordered Him to Kill My Lai Civilians

FORT BENNING, Ga., Feb. 23 (UPI)—1st Lt. William L. Calley Jr. testified today that his company commander on five occasions ordered him to kill women and children at My Lai.

He also cited four instances when he had shot individual villagers. Asked by defense counsel George Latimer why he did it, he replied: "Because that was my order, sir—that was the order of the day."

The order was given, he said, by Capt. Ernest Medina, during three separate briefings before the mission began and in two radio messages to the field saying that if the civilians could not be moved out of the way to "waste them."

Not Considered Human The defense contends Lt. Calley did not consider the villagers to be human beings, but only enemy with whom he could not talk or reason.

Lt. Calley is charged with the premeditated murder of 108 South Vietnamese civilians during the My Lai sweep.

Lt. Calley appeared collected as he resumed the story he began yesterday, but his voice quavered as he rattled off his recollections of the sweep through the village.

U.S. Planes Raid In North Vietnam To Aid Laos Push

SAIGON, Feb. 23 (Reuters).—Fifty American fighter-bombers this past weekend made the biggest air assault on North Vietnam in three months, attacking missile and gun sites along the Laotian border.

The strikes were in response to recent surface-to-air missile attacks on U.S. planes bombing the Ho Chi Minh Trail, a command spokesman said.

The raids were aimed at two main mountain passes at the head of the trail, which carries North Vietnamese troops and supplies to the south, military sources said.

The command also disclosed "final" casualty figures for the 39th Ranger Battalion of 450 men driven from a hilltop position in Laos on Saturday.

A Saigon spokesman said 622 North Vietnamese were killed and the rangers destroyed more than 500 captured weapons before they retreated to another position.

In the Laotian operation, 2,089 North Vietnamese have been killed compared with 376 South Vietnamese killed and 101 missing, the Saigon command said.

The South Vietnamese today reported their fourth helicopter shot down in Laos, an old H-34 hit by groundfire yesterday.

A Viet Cong battalion attacked a U.S. artillery base along the Cambodian border today in the biggest assault reported inside South Vietnam in six months.

The force of more than 400 men was apparently used as a diversion while a sapper squad slipped into the base and blew up a long-range gun and a gasoline storage facility.

The U.S. command said nine of the attackers and two Americans were killed. The base, 40 miles northwest of Saigon, is one mile from the Cambodian border and its guns regularly fire across the frontier.

No Farther, Saigon Says SAIGON, Feb. 23 (NYT)—A spokesman for the South Vietnamese military command said today that Saigon's forces had no intention "right now" of penetrating farther into Laos.

About 16,000 South Vietnamese troops, heavily supported by U.S. air and artillery power, have cut across the Ho Chi Minh Trail system in Laos to a depth of about 15 miles west of the South Vietnamese border.

A Top General For Saigon Dies in Crash

SAIGON, Feb. 23 (NYT)—Lt. Gen. Do Cao Tri, commander of the military region around Saigon and one of South Vietnam's most respected military leaders, was killed today when his helicopter crashed in Tay Ninh Province.

Gen. Tri, 41, was most noted for leading last year's campaign into Cambodia with more dash and personal participation than is usual among South Vietnamese field commanders.

François Sully, 42, a French citizen who has long been a Saigon correspondent for Newsweek magazine, was seriously injured in the crash and died several hours later at a U.S. hospital at Long Binh.

Two staff officers and a crew of four were reported aboard the helicopter when it exploded about three miles northwest of Tay Ninh because of mechanical trouble.

Gen. Tri's helicopter took off from the town of Tay Ninh presumably on an inspection tour of troops operating in Cambodia. The general's body has been identified, according to military sources, and was being flown to his headquarters at Bien Hoa near here.

As commander of the military region around Saigon, Gen. Tri was responsible for the security of the capital and vowed last year that there would be no more attacks on it. During his lifetime, this proved to be true.

It Judged Able to Meet Noise Limits

By Richard Witkin

YORK, Feb. 23 (NYT)—Engine redesign and air-improvements will enable the Boeing 747 to meet the Federal Aviation Administration's noise limits, according to the government's SST Noise Committee. The report made public yesterday by a seven-member committee says the SST manufacturers have agreed to meet the 108-decibel limit laid down for all new jetliners. Most of these are the Boeing 747, the McDonnell Douglas DC-10 and the Lockheed L-1011. The 747 must meet the noise limits by the end of the year. The committee also disclosed that the design team is making possible the reduction in noise by enlarging the engine nacelle, eliminating use of a tail fin, and use of a steeper takeoff angle and wing contours to reduce plane a steeper takeoff

Anti-Filibuster Bloc in Senate Beaten Again Reformers' Leader Blames Absenteeism

WASHINGTON, Feb. 23 (UPI)—Senate reformers were beaten by eight votes today in their second attempt in this session to cut off debate and force a vote on easing of the filibuster rule.

With two-thirds needed to break the talkathon against the reform proposal, the Senate voted only 50-38 in favor of the cutoff.

Today's cutoff vote was only two better than last week's attempt, which failed, 48 to 37. Not one senator who voted then against the cutoff switched this week.

The outcome of the vote today produced a dismal prospect for the reformers. They will get a third chance to break off debate a week from today, but unless they make a substantial improvement in their showing, all chances for breaking the filibuster against easing the rule will be finished.

Lower Ratio Sought
While some improvement is expected, it is doubtful that they can switch enough votes to their side. Reformers want to lower the ratio needed to cut off the legislative blocking tactic of extended debate—or filibuster—from two-thirds to three-fifths. They contend that a two-thirds majority is simply too difficult. It has been achieved only eight times in 53 years.

Sen. Frank Church, D. Idaho, one of the co-sponsors of the reform plan, pleaded with supporting senators to be present next Tuesday. He blamed absenteeism for his side's relatively poor showing today.

However, even if all of today's absentees present next week, it appears that Sen. Church's bloc would be able to count on no more than 56 votes. This is more than the reformers have ever received in a generation of trying but is still less than the required two-thirds.

Béjart in Paris

by David Stevens

PARIS, Feb. 23.—Maurice Béjart and his Ballet of the 20th Century, back from a week stand in Brooklyn, seems to have been a success and, in part, a bloodbath, as in Paris ten-day stand at the National Populaire with a repertoire of relatively new works seen here.

The maestro and his Brussels troupe have any right to lick after this New York debut, they are on the right place. Paris is second home and the seats at the TNP have been sold for the 11 dances that end Sunday. Thursday they were packed 2,500-plus unconditional admiring, or so it is for they broke into almost ritual rhythmic about ten seconds after the end of each ballet.

This first of two probing given here was, in fact, relatively subdued, by classical, relatively to. It was also an all-program—or almost all.

Most characteristic, and by way the most successful, was the three, was "Offrande graphique," for which the company is, perhaps, an ingeniously given credit; choreography. In any the whole company is in stage even while the scene is being seated, doing cruises and whatnot with a studied, yet engaging non-chalance. Things get going when Marina Gleigud tosses off the famous 32 fœtétés of "Swan Lake" fame, and the company gets down to business. The "choreographic offering" of the title has its musical equivalent in Bach's "Musical Offering," parts of which are used, broken up, commented on, and parodied by a huge battery of percussion instruments played by one man—Fernand Schirren—whose energetic performing above and behind the dancers was sometimes the most interesting movement on the stage. The troupe was divided into two units, the "classical" one led by the formidable Paolo Bortoluzzi and the parodic one by Micha Van Hoeca. The humor was a bit heavy at times, but it was all good, straightforward fun that gave the whole company a chance to show itself off. Thereafter Bach was treated with respect, and there is the rub. A choreographer who takes formidable and highly individual music as a point of departure is somewhat in the position of an opera composer who takes a great classical play for a libretto—it is a contest that someone has to win, and someone lose. Béjart's invention simply runs out before Bach's. But it is no crime to lose to Bach, and "Sonata" (Sonata No. 5 for violin and harpsichord) has the considerable virtue of being a very attractive showcase for the willowy elegance of Suzanne Farrell, while "Actus Tragicus" (Canatas 106 and 51) performs the same service for Bortoluzzi. Appearing separately on programs with greater contrast, both of these ballets come off to greater advantage. Coming one after another, the points at which they fall back on mere repetition and time-marking are more ruthlessly exposed.

ART IN LONDON: Another Look at Andy Warhol

By Max Wykes-Joyce

LONDON, Feb. 23.—The current event in the London art world is the Andy Warhol show, selected originally for the Pasadena Museum of Art last spring, and later seen in Chicago, Minneapolis and Paris. It has finally reached the Tate Gallery here. By Warhol's express wish, it consists of five series only—"Campbell's Soup Cans," "Disasters," "Flowers," "Portraits" and "Ballo Boxes," though many other aspects of his work are illustrated in the comprehensive catalogue.

Andy Warhol

Certain extremely interesting facts emerge from the exhibition so constituted. That Warhol's throwaway technique conceals a great deal more art and artifice than his from-time-to-time ingenious pronouncements would lead us to believe; that his work in color is infinitely more interesting than the black and white; and above all that Warhol is one of the most ingenious and subtle of colorists.

At the Hanover Gallery, Michael Vaughan's new paintings and gouaches are chiefly variations on the theme of a still life with cross and triangle; in effect, complex studies in perspective. Like giant illustrations of geometric jigsaws and puzzles, each recession and relief of each object, its shadow and counter-shadow, for Vaughan manipulates multiple light sources, is represented on the flat canvas in trompe l'oeil. The next logical progression for before shown her work. Her first exhibition, at the New Grafton Gallery, is of Mediterranean landscapes—Tuscany, Calabria, the Ionian Isles, the Cyclades and the Peloponnese—which she evokes with the greatest skill.

She has understood that the most typical feature of these ancient sought places is the trees; the distinctive shapes of oleander, pomegranate, fig and olive trees and the broom (plantagenet) shrub. She is inspired, as was the English Cavalier poet Edmund Waller by the venerable aspect of these ancient creatures:

"Bold sons of Earth! that thrust their arms so high As if once more they would invade the sky. In such green palaces the first Kings reign'd Slept in their Shades, and Angels entertained. With such wise Counsellors they did advise" the artist would seem to be kinetic sculpture, by which he could multiply a hundred-fold his already considerable visual vocabulary.

Italian-born Clothilde Peplow has been a painter for more than 30 years, but has never

And by frequenting sacred Groves grew wise."

At the Marlborough Gallery, the veteran Italian artist Emilio Moriondi holds his first British one-man exhibition. He works very much in the Lombard tradition; but that, and the fact that he works within very narrow bounds, as did Morandi and others more successfully, is really no justification for the extraordinary tedium of these oils.

Whether cactus, sunflower, entwined vegetation, the undergrowth of olive trees, what one might old-fashionedly term leaf studies, even some expressionist nudes, all are painted in predominantly muddy browns and olive green colors, thickly impasted in symbolic horse-shoe shapes. The most apt comment on the collection was made by a sharp-eyed friend of mine: "They must all have been cut from the same roll of fabric."

COMMENT: Maurice Béjart and the New York Critics

But ve described Béjart as rately resourceful dance " Paolo Bortoluzzi's l" as "well danced." Gleigud's Webern as "lanced" and the whole is "dismal failure." This thing more grotesque rt shrift. It is wholly ag. And how about coming down from the shot the wounded with unt "I can imagine no tayer ballet company re to appear with recorded tapes." Well, at least Béjart's clout in the international dance scene is nodded to with that inadvertent adjective "major."

Years ago I learned that the critic must describe, not praise, must evaluate the performance on its own terms, not his. A studio is where teachers issue instructions and correctives. Performance is where a reviewer reports an event in fair representation. It may be that failure inheres within any newspaper critic's job. Flaubert once said that "The only way not to be unhappy is to shut yourself up in art, and count everything else as nothing." Relevant as this sounds, it does not apply to the critic. Habitual passive presence before a practicing and practiced art leads not to expanded experience but to stoniness. You begin to look without seeing. Listen without hearing, react without feeling. A critic's visits are more or less compulsory, choiceless, commercial. He attends for a livelihood, not a life. The basic anomaly is that he, performer, takes or denies pleasure without ever completing the traffic by giving. The critic is a non-creative, unoriginal person perpetually exposed to inventive and innovative personalities, and this likens him to a magistrate who, neither commits crime nor is victimized, only an administrator of arbitrary law as presumed protection against a supposed society.

Béjart deserved a better critical filtering to the public than he got in America. All right, maybe he seems artificial when he could be artistic, cosmetic instead of beautiful, full of chicanery rather than chic. Perhaps he mistakes volts for watts, or narrales too extensively. He might even offend for being French and collaborating with Wagner and Strauss. Probably boys shouldn't lie on top of boys on stage, and actual kisses oughtn't to be used between ballerina and ballerina, although the notices omitted comment on these heresies. If his orientalism in "Bakhti" milti and mashi the purity of choreographic art, they are certainly better than the monstrous hybrids Barnes has watered with his patience elsewhere. Too, what's wrong with being derivative? Karl Philipp Emanuel was a greater innovator than his father, but I prefer Johann Sebastian. Now that the run is over and the damage done, more and more I believe Béjart fulfilled his and our art. He gave pleasure: he created enjoyment. Night after night at the Brooklyn Academy during intermissions, you could see enormous delight on the faces of the young audiences. Their smiles blazed until you were blinded when they spotted one of the dancers at the back, not dancing that night but watching his or her confrere on the stage. They recognized these strangers from Brussels, that is, those did who hadn't been turned away by the foul notices.

—FAUBION BOWERS

Béjart

HOW difficult it is for me to put into words all that my colleagues and I feel after three weeks of performances in New York. We have had a very positive experience, which will enable us to take an important step, not only artistically but even more in a deep human sense. For we have experienced the enthusiasm and love of an audience in another of the world's great cities, and it is this quality of response which nourishes every creative artist.

We leave New York with only one regret—the lack on the part of certain journalists in understanding my intentions as a choreographer and as a man of the theater. That a critic may oppose someone's esthetic with his own is understandable, though it leads to a clarification of the critic's own mind rather than of the object of his criticism.

Like others, I have had my share of critics who accept me and those who reject me. But never before, in my 18 years as a choreographer, in a major or lesser city of the world, has a rejection of my work on the part of a journalist been interlarded with an abuse which attempts to reduce me to a provincial or, worse, to a cheat. My indignation is tempered by a deep sadness over the attempt to reduce an artist, whose life is dedicated to his work, to the cheapness of a charlatan. Perhaps, if I could put into words here a few of the things which my audiences at the Brooklyn Academy of Music obviously responded to (for so many of them spoke and wrote to me), we can with a little patience bring such critics to an understanding that theirs is not the only road to Jerusalem. I am often asked who my teachers are, where I derive my sources of inspiration, to which school I adhere.

My teachers have consistently been humanity, not in general but very specifically: people who respond to life with their emotions, their sounds, their gestures, the movements of their bodies. Thus, I find the sources of the inspiration for my ballets in the fantastic treasure of the world's folklore. This is the basic art—original, primordial, reaching everyone with its impact.

It is through my working with folklore that I have learned how much, beyond our apparent differences, we are really alike and how, through the centuries, the dance remains a unity despite the differences of race and geography. By delving into the vast folklore of humanity, one finds basically the same steps, the same ritual gestures, the same port de bras in Africa, in Russia, in Spain, in India.

One attains an art where simplicity remains in the service of the language of the body. It is in this spirit that I composed my "Sacre du Printemps," "Pirabird" and "Bolero" as what I deeply believe are truly international folk ballets of the 20th century.

To which school do I adhere? To the school of humanity of which the dance is an act of love. It was this love which transformed the Brooklyn Academy of Music into a place of living celebration. The audience gave us love with, I believe, as much or even more ardor than elsewhere in the world. It was their love which enabled the spectacle on stage to renew its inspiration.

Day after day, when people came to me and said: "How beautiful your dancers are," I could have answered: "Yes, thanks to you, since tonight they knew they were really loved."

If it is embarrassing or old-fashioned to recognize in love—whatever its thrust, sacred or profane—the motivating force of my work in the theater, the element which weaves together all my experiments in choreography, I can only hope that what my audiences see so clearly will eventually be seen just as clearly by those who refuse to look.

Rare Goya Painting To Be Auctioned

LONDON, Feb. 23 (AP)—A rare painting by the Spanish master Francisco de Goya owned by American art collector Arthur Sachs comes under the hammer at Sotheby's auction in London March 24.

The work is a full-length portrait of Asensio Julia, Goya's assistant. Goya taught him to paint and the two men became close friends. Goya has inscribed the canvas: "Goya a su amigo Asensio" (Goya to his friend Asensio).

A spokesman for Sotheby's said the picture was considered the best example of Goya's work to appear in the salesroom for many years. "The last Goya we sold was in 1963 but that was only a minor work," the spokesman said. "This is a major work and it is also a rare one, probably rarer than Goya's portrait of the Duke of Wellington." The Wellington portrait brought £140,000.

The made-to-measure plane.

Most airlines buy their planes off-the-peg. They look at what's being built, and buy what comes closest to their needs. Add a bit here, take off a bit there—and you're in business. BEA decided that wasn't good enough for Europe's number one airline. We wanted the planes to fit our passengers, and suit our requirements—not vice versa. So first we asked people what they wanted in a plane. We asked you, the passengers. We asked pilots, stewardesses, and engineers. We took into consideration European conditions—airfield facilities, length of flight, climatic variations. Then we went to Hawker Siddeley, and showed them what we wanted. And they built it. With engines by—of course—Rolls-Royce. Result—the Trident fleet. Our exclusive team of made-to-measure passenger jets. Trident One—for short-haul, medium density routes. Trident Two—for the longer runs, Trident Three—for short-haul high density routes. That's the Trident team. Guaranteeing you a faster, smoother, quieter flight than any other plane in European service. Tailor-made for BEA—for Europe—and for you. Try one on sometime—and see how well it fits.

BRIDGE

By Alan Truscott

Every bridge player knows that he should plan ahead when the dummy appears. But such planning may be possible at an earlier stage: An expert considering an opening lead may be able to predict the course of the play by accurate interpretation of the opposing bids.

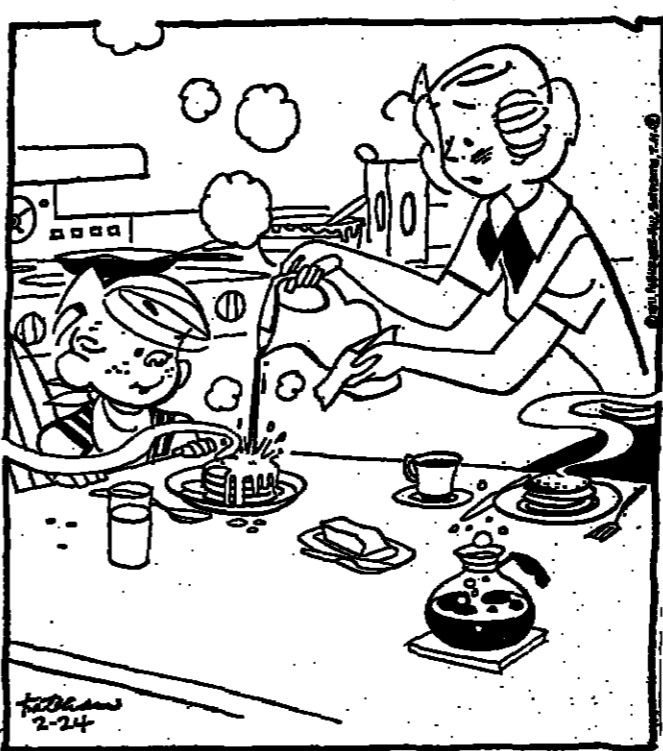

The ability to look at 13 cards and foresee the future, by logical inference rather than cartomancy, is well illustrated by the diagrammed deal. It was played in a world championship match in which Italy opposed France.

North and South for Italy were Benito Garozzo and Eugenio Chiaradia, employing the Neapolitan Club, which nowadays is called the Blue Team Club. South's opening bid was an extreme example of "canapé," a style that requires a short suit to be bid before a long one.

North's jump shift response promised a very strong suit, and South showed his diamonds and followed with Blackwood. When he discovered that North held three aces and one king—clearly the spade king—he judged that seven diamonds would be a good contract.

West was the late Dr. Georges Thérion, who was one of Europe's greatest players, and he settled down to work out the best lead. He knew that his opponents' bidding would be both accurate and descriptive.

BOOKS

THE ORDER OF THINGS An Archaeology of the Human Sciences

By Michel Foucault. Pantheon Books, 337 pp. $16.

Reviewed by Maurice Cranston

A FEW years ago a bright new star began to shine in the intellectual firmament of Paris, by name, Michel Foucault. He was a philosopher whose books were so unconventional and so brilliantly written that they became best-sellers. He was young and combative, and he seemed only too eager to act as the spokesman for his generation. Moreover, Foucault was the exponent of a new "ign." Structuralism. And structuralism was promoted as the philosophy of the new generation, who no longer wanted anything so stale as existentialism.

Foucault did much to make structuralism fashionable in France, but structuralism was in no sense his invention. Claude Lévi-Strauss, a considerably older man—contemporary of Sartre's—had already developed a theory of structural anthropology which stimulated the interest of others besides anthropologists, and put the word "structuralism," so to speak, on the map. But Lévi-Strauss is a specialist; his work is limited to the fields of anthropology and sociology. Foucault has carried structuralism into the wider spheres of philosophy and history. His latest book to appear in English is also his most substantial one, "The Order of Things," a translation of "Les Mots et les Choses," which came out in French in 1966. It is a work that is no longer quite so much "à la mode" as it was in Paris five years ago. Foucault himself has consolidated his academic standing, and has been elevated to the eminence of a chair at the Collège de France, alongside Lévi-Strauss.

The central ideas which Foucault and Lévi-Strauss have in common stem from their repudiation of what they call 19th-century positivism. They reject the view that man's knowledge of the universe is based on observation of the empirical external world. They claim that man is essentially a thinking animal who lives in a world which is intelligible to him only because he imposes his own rational order upon his experience. The order does not exist in nature itself, but is contributed by the understanding mind. Lévi-Strauss, as an anthropologist, is chiefly interested in the thought structure which can be found to underlie the most diverse cultures, including the so-called primitive ones. He argues that there are basic similarities—between all the thought structures and languages which different societies possess. Foucault is not concerned with primitive societies. And whereas Lévi-Strauss has seen the resemblances which underlie seeming diversity, Foucault has stressed the differences which may be detected in the thought patterns of the same culture at different periods of its history. And just as Lévi-Strauss has attacked the prevailing notion that primitive societies think differently from advanced societies, Foucault has attacked the notion that there is a Western view of the world, continuing from antiquity to the present day. Foucault first made his name with a book called "Histoire de la Folie," in which he argued that Western man's understanding of reality—the conceptual scheme by which he made the world intelligible to himself—altered radically more than once between medieval and modern times. He suggested that the medieval view of the world enabled men to understand madness, whereas the rationalist view of the world that man adopted in the age of science made madness unintelligible, indeed embarrassing. He studied man's changing idea of rationality in terms of his changing attitude to tradition.

In "The Order of Things," Foucault goes over the span of Western history and studies our changing understandings of rationality in relation to that structure in which rationality is made vocal: language. Every period in our history, Foucault argues, has its own way of seeing reality, and each has its own distinct idea of the relation between words and things. We may think we have a knowledge which we express in words, but in truth it is the order of words which constitutes our "knowledge," and the world we know is not something independent of us, but a world we construct for ourselves. We are bred in the mythology of our culture to prefer one conception to another; but objectively, Foucault argues, no one conception of the universe is any better than another. Foucault is likely to be remembered less for his positive philosophical theories than for his critical ideas. Wherever his books have been published they have helped to undermine confidence in established forms of psychology and the other social sciences. Not only does he dispute the logical possibility of a science of man but he has made the very conception of such a science seem to be bourgeois and reactionary. Like Noam Chomsky in America, he has given his structuralism an ideological and radical image. This perhaps in part explains his appeal to the youthful public. But the brilliance of his style, his irony and his sense of paradox endear Foucault's writing to more worldly and more sober readers. Whereas most French philosophers since the war have been solemn and Germanic, Foucault belongs to the older French tradition of Voltaire. He wears his learning lightly and if he sometimes is outrageous he is never dull.

Maurice Cranston, professor of political science at the University of London, wrote this review for Book World, literary supplement of The Washington Post.
